Email 1: Invitation

Subject: You're Invited: Arkansas River Restoration Site Visit, June 14

Dear [First Name],

You've helped make this work possible. Now we'd like to show you what it looks like on the ground.

Please join us for a Trout Unlimited donor site visit along the upper Arkansas River on Saturday, June 14. We'll walk a recently completed restoration reach, hear from our conservation staff about the science behind the work, and see firsthand how reconnected habitat is supporting native trout populations through drought and wildfire recovery.

Email 3: Post-Event Thank You

Subject: Thank you for joining us on the Arkansas

Dear [First Name],

Thank you for spending Saturday morning with us on the upper Arkansas. It was a pleasure to share the restoration site with you and to hear your questions and reflections along the way.

Moments like these remind us why this work matters: standing beside a reconnected side channel, watching cold water flow into habitat that will support native trout for generations. That's only possible because of donors like you.

Appendix: How I'd Operationalize This

For context, here's how I'd support this event beyond the emails.

Pre-Event:

- Send confirmation email with logistics, directions, and schedule to confirmed attendees
- Prepare check-in sheet, name tags, and printed feedback cards
- Brief conservation staff on talking points and donor context

Day-Of:

- Manage check-in and attendance tracking
- Facilitate introductions and keep schedule on track
- Collect feedback cards at wrap-up

Post-Event (within 72 hours):

- Update CRM with attendance, notes, and interest areas
- Send follow-up email to non-attendees with photos and next opportunity
- Log prospects for Donor Circle cultivation and planned giving conversations

Reporting:

- Compile event metrics (invites sent, RSVPs, attendance rate, feedback themes)
- Document follow-up actions with owners and due dates
- Integrate outcomes into quarterly development report
